The importance and benefits of exercise has become so great that many companies have now started their own corporate wellness programs to help lower insurance costs. The main reason companies start a corporate wellness program today is because it helps prevent health issues by reducing claims by employees which, in turn, saves money for the company. These corporations realize there is a link between the prevention and the investment of health in their staff. In addition to increased productivity and a reduction in absenteeism, a corporate wellness program generally raises the company morale and camaraderie amongst corporate fitness members.

This year-round, non-motorized trail offers a unique view of area historic sites and a functioning mining operation. The trail winds through Poverty Gulch, where Bob Womack first discovered gold in 1890. Start at the Cripple Creek Welcome Center at North 5th St and Bennett, (offering convenient off-street parking) the Laura Bridge on South 2nd St, or the top of Hoosier Mine Pass. Trail visitors should be prepared for a variety of weather conditions, an altitude of over 9,000 feet and some steep terrain.
