The importance and benefits of exercise has become so great that many companies have now started their own corporate wellness programs to help lower insurance costs. The main reason companies start a corporate wellness program today is because it helps prevent health issues by reducing claims by employees which, in turn, saves money for the company. These corporations realize there is a link between the prevention and the investment of health in their staff. In addition to increased productivity and a reduction in absenteeism, a corporate wellness program generally raises the company morale and camaraderie amongst corporate fitness members.
